

GOD AS MOTHER<sup>1</sup>

There has always been a tendency to treat God as more nearly resembling a mother than father, though the claim for motherhood has been firstly made in favour of our Earth, The reason for this predilection is not far to seek, for we are more surely born of the earth and are sustained by the products of the earth and are sustained by the products of the earth, rather than by any other entity, even as our human mother had brought us out of her womb and has

<sup>1</sup> Cf. Encyclopedia of Religion and Ethics: vol.p147 writes about the Divine spirit or mother goddess in the Mediterranean: "In regard to the Aegean Divine Spirit itself, personified in the iconic age as a goddess and a young God, the student of comparative religion finds himself on very familiar ground. A goddess with a young subordinate God is known in early times, in every coast of the Mediterranean which looked towards Create. In Puni8c Africa she is Tanit with her son; in Egypt, Isis with Horus; in Phoenicia, Ashtaroth with Tammuz (Adonis); in Asia Minor Cybele with Attis; in Greece (and especially in Greek Crete itself). Rhea with the young Zeus, Everywhere she is a virgin i.e. unwed, but made the mother first of her companion by immaculate conception, and then of the gods and all life by the embrace of there own son. In memory of these original facts the cult ( especially the most esoteric mysteries of it) is marked by various practices and observances symbolic of the negation of true marriage and obliteration of sex..."

But this Śakti worship was not followed by Sumerians and Aryans, Babylonians and the Assyrians: "Ishtar the most prominent female deity in the Babytlonian pantheon, corresponding to Ashtarte (Astarte) of Ashtoreth of the other semites, occupied a subordinate place as compared to Anu, the Heave God, Enlil, the Earth God, Eas, the Water God, Sin, the Moon God, and Shamash, the Sun-God". (The Indo-Aryan Races: Chanda.pp.150). The Semites seem to have passed through the matriarchic stage of society before their separation. (Ency. Rel. & Ethics Vol.II.p.115) nourished us with her milk and provided us with all the protections from changes. Thus from ancient times the earth-has been worshipped as goddess in various forms, and the so-called pastoral and other goddesses are linked up with the earth goddess. After all, the mother is the self-sacrificing nourisher of the child inside and outside the womb, and the child owes its first love and loyalty to the mother.

But there has always been another tendency, also traceable to the anthropomorphic analogy which made God the father, who was the real seed-giver, and therefore more fully to be known as the source of our life, whereas the mother is the self-sacrificing nourisher of the child inside and outside the womb, and the child owes its first love and loyalty to the mother.

But there has always been another tendency, also traceable to the anthropomorphic analogy which made God the father, who was the real seed-giver, and therefore more fully to be known as the source of our life, whereas the mother was the bearer and nourisher of the seed. Thus man had known two sources of his life and birth, the father and the mother, Earth and God, the Spirit, Primeval Male. That is the reason why the progenitor and cause of the universe was known as Dyāva-Pr̥thvī in R̥g Veda. This twin-divinity has been always the religious idea of God, though it was at certain periods considered that there was One deity with both the functions of Nature and Deity, the womb and the granter of the Seed<sup>1</sup>.

Some thinkers indeed claim that the idea of God involved the idea of first cause, and as such it would be more appropriate speak of God as the bhūta-yoni, as feminine rather than as masculine, for no male has been as such a creator or producer of another creature. As we have stated, some others do not think it inappropriate to speak of God and His Nature or spouse, who conjointly might be said to do the creation-business. This view got philosophical sanction in Sāmkhya where Puruṣa and Prakṛit together in some manner start the process of evolution. Some theorists by a wise distribution of functions it may be said granted to God intelligence, consciousness and transcendence, whereas they granted to His power śakti, considered as female, the ability to manifest the universe. Inappropriately enough some of those belonging to this school by reason of that inveterate habit of rational thought to speak in dichotomous terms argued that Consciousness is absolute passivity whereas the power of consciousness is dynamic but ignorant (unconscious). This delimitation of functions of the supreme Deity to omniscience without omnipotence, and of His power to omnipotence without any consciousness in the world-creations, whilst it may appear to be an easy solution, is by no means easy of acceptance, for it makes God wait on His power which was a personified subordinate deity. But a more understandable solution was also mooted, it was to make God one only, having both the qualities of consciousness and power, who by the one ideated and by the other executed that ideation. But here arises a third question: why indeed should God create the creatures if He was perfect in Himself and create such impoverished creatures? This is a question that we shall have always to bear in mind as the sorest point of all theologies and philosophies of absolute perfection or the Absolute.

But then the Mother-idea is not fully expressed by the mere fact of origination. Vedānta holds the view that Brahman is to be considered as the Source of all birth and others (Janmād yasya yataḥ:I.1.1), and under the word

'ādi' was included such other functions and as 'sustention' 'destruction'. It was only the theistic school which included under this also the other function of 'redemption,' which however was held by some to be included under the word 'sustention'. The fact of love for the created is indeed held to be included under the general notion of 'sustention'. God loves His creates, else He would not have created them. He therefore nourshes them leads them by the right path away from the wrong path, incarnates constantly into His creation for enjoying the company of His creatures, uplifts and redeems and establishes the law for His creatures. Granting freedom to them He even instructs them in the arts of utilizing that freedom for the great Freedom of the Universal life that is Himself alone, This paternal instinct for the creatures born of Him is, it was deemed, more fully realised in the mothering-parent than in the fathering-parent, since the father is more a ruler and sovereign than the mother who is considered to be more approachable too<sup>1</sup>. That such a position is possible and is available in our

<sup>1</sup> We know from certain important studies in Psychoanalysis in modern times especially by Sigmund Freud and his school that the child is jealous, of course unconsciously, of its father and this is due to sexual unconsciousness (for we should not use the word consciousness in this context). It is because of rivalry the made child will hate the father, whereas the female child will hate the mother. But such a view does not explain the growth of the idea of Fatherhood nor the Motherhood of God as such. the father is undoubtedly the master of the house in certain matters whereas the mother is equally the master of the house in others, though the relative externality in social contact pertains to the father, and relative internality regarding home affairs pertains to the mother. The concept social life, as in the lives of lower animals, where the caretaking of young ones falls on the mother, is clearly proof of this contention. Whether from the point of view of religion, we do need to worship the Divine in this tow-fold manner through love for the mother-hood of God so as to attain the free-hood which is the Grace of God, the father, is an important question. We have shewn elsewhere that the Divine God's Nature must be considered to be such that it enfolds all the manifold ways of approach and relationships that respond to the individual's manifold needs of being, and evolution and freedom.

At least this view seems to have played a distinguished role in the system of Hindu Philosophy called the Āgamas, Just as the goddesses, devīs, in the R̥g Veda and literature, so also we have mention of śaktis or powers, the counter – parts of the deities, devas. It is however to be borne in mind that the Āgamas also claim to speak the voice of the Veda and in a more elaborate and 'intensive form' than has been preserved in the darśanas schools of Philosophy. The Purāṇas also lend colour to the view that they have attempted a kind of synthesis of the philosophical and practical (āgama) views.

II

The mother Idea in the veda must primarily be referred to the originative or 'wombal' nature of the Divine bhūtayoni. Agni is most closely associated with the processes of birth<sup>1</sup> and growth in living beings, being the celestial fire as well as the inner fire. So too, in Tvaṣṭṛ the specific functioning of bringing about the transformation of the form of creature is expressed. It may be conceded that though all the beginning one does not conceive of the unity of the Creator and His filed or power, later on rational analysis revealed the two personalities, the creator and his power and filed, which are represented as husband and wife, who form on an inseparable Unity.

When we trace the history of the term Śakti (or Sacī) in Vedic literature<sup>1</sup>, we come across the twin concepts of vivification and reproduction, both of which belong to the idea of concept of motherhood. It is further seen that these tow purposes are served by the jñā-goddesses such as Sarasvatī, Ilā, Dhīṣanī, Medhā and others. The development of these goddesses of knowledge<sup>2</sup> into diverse personalities along with the Degvī, Sacī, Indrāni, Agayī, Vāruṇī, Āramati, Puramdhī, Pṛthivī, Uṣas. Lakṣmī, reveals, according to certain writers, the emergence of abstract personalities represented by or corresponding to the functions or forces of the corresponding Gods.

<sup>1</sup> Dyāvā-Pṛthvī is the pair in Rg.V.I.364; V.84; AV.XII.1. Pṛthvī in later literature becomes bhūdevī (bhūmādevī) the consort of Viṣṇu Viṣṇuna viṣṇor pṛthvi path. Of her: A.V.XII.1 writes. “She is great, shining, firm and quickens the earth by scattering rain from a cloud”.

<sup>2</sup> Jñā goddesses give the clue to the equation made about Māyā being equivalent to jñāna or vayunam, for they act from a deep and fundamental superconsciousness that appears as ignorance or veiling power, but only so to the conscious mental being.

It is clear that the so-called abstract nature of the powers is a description that can be relative only to our analysis of the functions or otherwise, and no deity is abstract as such of He or She strands for a specific function. Metaphysically reproductive and vivificatory functions were felt to be different conceptually, because conceptualized, but as having a unitary ground in one substance. Thus we find the growth of multiplicity, whether we conceive this multiplicity as entirely feminine or masculine or masculine and feminine, by an arbitrary definition of sex<sup>1</sup>. But common though this practice might be, yet we have to keep our eye fixed on the essentials, and never forget that it is the One substance that is the ground of the many functions or qualities or powers, and these powers and qualities and functions reveal to us the substance, and it is only when we see them so related to the One Supreme Consciousness, that we pass beyond the illusion of the many.

The Brāhmaṇa literature lifts these śaktis from the position of mere powers, which was already passing into the notion of spouse, to the level of patnis who have equal places in the Sacrifice<sup>2</sup>. the metres Gāyatrī, Triṣṭubh, Anuṣṭubh,

<sup>1</sup> Rg V.I.164.16: “The told me those were males, though truly females He who hath eyes sees this, the blind discern not”.

<sup>2</sup> Jñā: womenis a collective term for the consorts of gods. These are the several are female powers. Cf. It. Brāh.III.327; Kaus. Brāh.III.8 says that they are controllers of union (in full moon and new moon offering). Later Śat Brāh.VI.5.4.7. Jñāh:metres, Tait.Brāh.V.i.7.2 Chandāmsī vai jñāh: But metres are living forces as well as special syllabic grouping in particular metres such as Gāyatri, Anuṣṭuby, Jagatī, which are definite measures.

Jagatī are all considered to be powers. Gāyatri<sup>1</sup> is tejas, Triṣṭubh is the specific energy of the senses. Anuṣṭubh the potent principle of Sacrifice (Yajñā). She contains in herself, force, balam, vīryam. (Tait. Sam.II.4.3.1). Metre being measure, we can see here already that Māyā is also measure. Therefore later on we find that Māyā and metre and Śakti we all equated.

Dr. Das shows that the śakti or power of the metres and syllables is finally resolved into the concept of Vāk(Cow)<sup>2</sup>. Vāk

<sup>1</sup> Gāyatrī is the special measure of Agni, for like him it has the power to carry sacrifice to the Gods. Gāyatrī is of 24 syllables etc, Rg V.III.62, 10; B.G. X, 35. Anuṣṭubh is Vīrya, Vajra with which the gods pierce the Night of the Asuras: Tāndya Brāh. IX.1.1. It has eight syllables to a quarter. Metres are produced from Vāk (Pranava), cf. Sri Aurobindo's exposition of the Kenopaniṣad (Arya II.p.90ff) where he shews that the mentioned in Kena 1.i.3.3 does not refer to mere speech but to Vāk's word power, that creative power which is stated to be at the beginning.

<sup>2</sup> Rg.V.X.71 and 125 are entirely devoted to the hymning of the Vāk which is called the Cow: cf. Av. VIII. 10, 12-13, cf.Dr.Das (p25ff śakti). Weber considers Vāk to be a chaotic primordial principle. But whether it is a chaotic primordial principle because of being the Mother-principle. But whether it is a chaotic primordial principle because of being the Mother-principle is not quite clear. In fact the Womb is the dark abode, indistinguished matrix of all eternally in and of that. That creation as the first projection or delivery of Vāk from the creator is clear from Śāt.Brāh.VI.1.9; Pañcavimśati Brāh, VI.1.3; X.2.1 where Vāk interrogated by Prajāpati replies to him saying that she was his own self. Saiva to Vāg ityabravit. Again P.B.XX.14.2 Vāk is stated to be the companion principle of Prajāpati in the matter of creation; Prajāpati va idam eka asit Tasya Vāg eva svam āsi. Vāg dvitīya sa aikṣāt, idam evam vācam vyaṣṛjata sedam sarvam bibhvanty ait. Kāthaka S.XII.5.27.1 Prajāpati va idam āsit, Tasya vāg dvitīyāsīt, tam mithunam samabhavat, sa garbham ādhatta.....

is that which is finally the outcome of Prajāpati (creator) whose śakti she declares herself to be. She is stated to be the mother of Ṛk, Sāman and Yajus, She is the active power of Brahman proceeding from him (Rg.V.X.125). She is speech which is the productive principle of energy. Indeed it is even stated in the Veda that without it the created beings cannot be free from blemish and sin. That is the reason why things are given names (Rg.V.X,1.5.6:Sat.Brāh.VI.1.3.9.10).

Vāk in the Rg Veda is already the supreme principle of manifestative power, the supreme female energy. She was first with Brahman, then with Bṛhaspati; and in the Brāhmanas we see her with the Creator-Ruler of creatures (Prajāpati). She is the ubiquitous principle of being. She is Sarasvatī, Bhīṣanī; and Varuṇī, Parameṣṭhīnī (A.V.XIX.9.3). Thus we find that the stage is set for the Motherhood of God in and through the power of Vāk who is stated to be as ubiquitous as Brahman Himself. She is the Śakti, and Brahman is the Śktimān. All male powers and female powers may be considered to be just fulgurations or spreadings or differentiations (conceptually considered even separated from one another without losing that central unity in the Divine Brahman), and related as such in every manifestation. So much so the Śrī-Sūkta could say: Īśvarīm sarva bhūtānām tam ihopahvaye śriyam. (9), even as the Bhagavad Gītā says of the Brahman Puruṣottama 'Īśvaraḥ sarva bhūtānām hṛdde Arjuna tiṣṭhatī'. Indeed she appears as the Daivī Māyāk or Prakṛit of the Gītā.

The śrī-Sūkta appeals to the great Agni Jātavedas, the knower of all created beings or births, to lead the devotee to Her of supremest beatitude and even worldly fulfillment and wealth and children. The idea is that Śrī, Lakṣmi, is the auspicious giver of everything and without her there can only be alākṣmi, true and unmitigated sorrow. The appeal to Agni is because the true messenger is always the Outer fire of the altar, and the inner fire of consecrated and burnished will, aspiration, who is the knower of our inner being and growth and life and, as such is the first leader towards the true happiness from which all worldly wealth may also be got. The one important truth that must be grasped by any student of mystical consciousness is 'Knowing that one knows all, attaining That one attains all, enjoying that one enjoys all,' since His is the entire world of being and non-being (transcendent Being). Sri or Lakṣmi is the fulfillment of the aspiration, the goal of all striving and the peak of Good Life in God or Truth or Delight. That she is the indwelling being of all creatures and beings is also intimated by this Sūkta. Thus it prepares the way for the development envisaged in the later āgamas, where she is stated to be seated in the heart of not only all creatures but also of God wherefore God is spoken of as Śrī-nivasa, the abode of Śrī or śreyas. It is also to be noted that without her Grace final release can never happen; for as śreyas is the goal of all reality, without a descent of the Divine Grace or Śrī, there can never be any true and complete realisation. But this view is not yet visible in the Śukta where Agni Jātavedas is being invoked to lead the soul to her. It is only in later Vedānta of Rāmānuja that we find the Śrī becoming the Agent, the puruṣakāra, who leads the soul to the Divine. In other words, the duty of leading that belongs to Agni Jātavedas is referred to Śrī herself. But it may also be construed that there are two stages, the Agni Jātavedas leads up to Śrī, and Śrī leads the soul to the Supreme Realization. This view is supported by the kenopaniṣad story of Umā Haimavati helping the great Indra to know who the Wonderful Being that appeared was, thus playing the role of the leader-teacher of the Gods.

THE MOTHER IN THE ĀGAMA

The Āgama or Tantra literature is, we may remark, the source of sectarianism or rather the source of exalting godheads over one another. They are considered to be very old but we could place them about the period of the Sūtras if not contemporaneous with the Upaniṣads. These tantras are the Śaiva (pāśupata and siddhānta), Vaiṣṇava (Pāñcarātra and Vaikhānasa) and Śakta. We know that Buddhism and Jainism also have their own āgamas. The literature on the Śakta-worship has been made available to us by the Tantric Texts published under the able editorship of Avalon (Sir John woodruff) and the Kashmirian Texts edited by Jagadish Chatterjee. A full exposition of the tantric form of meta-physics and theology could well be gleaned from Dr. Chatterjee's book kāshmirian Śaivism and from Arthur Avalon's innumerable works. Here I shall deal only with the most important aspects.

Śakti is all important. She is the Mother who could lead us to Siva. She is the puruṣakāra(agency). Lalitā is the supreme Śakti aspect of the Brahman, the Aniruddha-Sarasvatī (the all-spreading and itself unlimited power). It is claimed by Kaulas among whom may be mentioned the great Naiyāyika commentator. Bhāskarācārya, that this aspect of the Brahman is recognized in the Vedas (Rg.V.V.47.4). "Lalitā is the Brahman as the active principle in creation when Her power is fully evolved the Śakta seeks her alone. It is She who visible through Her manifestations counts for Him". Therefore the view that the Mother of the Universe is not to be taken to be the spouse and therefore inferior to Brahman has been propounded by many faithful ones at all times.

The relationship between Śiva and Śakti and is close and inseparable (avinābhāva). Śiva and Śakti are one, and neither is higher than the other. "In the supreme state Śakti exists in her own svarūpa form as being – consciousness-bliss (saccidānandamayī) indistinguishable form Śiva. "But the Śakti is not identical with Māyā. “Śakti is not to be identified with this form of it (māyā). Māyā is particular and comparatively gross form of Śakti.” The original or primal form of śakti (ādyaśakti) is the goal of śakti-sādhana. To attain that is to attain Śiva, for “Śiva and Śakti exist in mutual embrace and love eternally.” From this Śakti exist in mutual embrace and love eternally.” From this śakti that is undoubtedly united with and supported by Śiva and śakti that is undoubtedly united with and supported by Śiva proceeds the creation of the world through several descending movements of Nāda (Primal Sound), Bindu (vortex) and etc. Māyā is a particular gross form of Śakti as she appears after evolution of the first three principles of Nāda, Bindu and Vidya<sup>1</sup>. Māyā is the disintegrating force of multiplicity, a veil and a limiting force of the manifold thus manifested, and finally is the veiling force that hides away the central continuity from the many which have been manifested and limited.

Whilst we find that a more rational account of the two-fold powers of the Divine can be given, we also know the extremes to which this discrimination (analysis or separation) has led to. So much so, Vedānta had sternly to revert to the Neuter and the Transcendental (Nirguṇa) aspect of the Deity, Brahman. For example the Kubjaka Tantra (quoted by Arthur Avalon) says “Not Brahmā, Viṣṇu, Rudra, create, maintain and destroy; but Brāhmi, Viṣṇavī, Rudāṇī. Their husbands are but dead bodies. “On the contrary, there is the saner-statement of the Mahānirvaṇa Tantra which says that Parabrahman, Devī, Śiva and all other devas and devīs are but One, and he who thinks of them as different from one another goes to hell. This latter recalls in some measure the true spirit of the Vedas.

In Sādhana, the individual soul being microcosmic representation or reflection of the Śiva (macrocosmic Being), the śakti, the inner power within (kundalinī), leads it when awakened, to higher levels even as a mother does, and finally grants it the experience of the Ultimate Union between śakti and Śiva within itself and in the Cosmic Vision. Some writers try to make a distinction between Śiva and Pramaśiva, a distinction that has a bearing on the microcosmic and macrocosmic, jīva and Śiva. But through out Śakti is one only, for She leads the jīva for the sake of Śiva and not only for the sake of the individual soul, jīva<sup>1</sup>.

Śrī Śankarāchārya's most famous Hymn to the Mother, Saundaryalahiri has a magnificent description of the Supreme Beauty and Glory of the Mother who is the causa sui<sup>2</sup>.

“Śiva unless conjoined with Thee will not be able even to move; the great Gods therefore worship Thee”. Wherefore even to prostrate before her or to praise her, Her grace is required. “With a dust of Thane feet the Creator Brahma creates the world and a dust of Thine feet alone does Viṣṇu of the form of Serpent of thousand heads support with great strain or effort. That too does ś

Iva wear for powdering Hs body. Further that very dust of Thy feet becomes the Light of the Sun: for the Darkness within, for the ignorant, for the Idiotic (or Inconscient), it becomes the Honey of the Consciousness-Power, for the poor (in wealth or in spirit it becomes the Wish-

<sup>1</sup> Maṇḍala Brāhmaṇa Up.I. Evanm sahañānandā yadā mano liyate tadā śāmbhavi tam eva khecarīm āhuḥ. According to the major Upaniṣads these are levels or centres of consciousness above the Ājñā. Above the ājñā is the Soma an then there is the Amanaska or Unmani and beyond it are the Nāda and Nādānta and Bindu centres.

giving stone, and it becomes the Tusk of Varāha (The Slayer of Mura) for those who are sinking in the ocean of births (and deaths).” Śrī Śankarācārya speaks of Her as being worshipped in the form of Śrī-Cakra, and of Kundaīnī Śakti moving freely in all the psychonic centers as plexuses within the human body. From Her proceeds all creative poetry, beauty, attractiveness, power of destruction of all evil, disease, fevers, and delight supreme, and attainment of fullest union (sāyujyapadavīm). She is all things and elements, and always contemplating on the Cidānanda Form of Śiva. Thus the first portion of the Saundaryalahiri called the Ānandalahiri, “Waves of Bliss” is a magnificent description of the mother’s supreme Nature as beyond the trayi (the triple), She is however considered to be the spouse of Śiva, Sadāśiva, the Cidānanda, who is spoken of as the Being in the Sahasrāra (the thousand petalled-lotus on the crest of the head). She however is also the Mother of love.

Thus all the stages of ascent are to be achieved by the individual soul who had descended into the formations of Śakti and had become limited and bond and even ignorant, only through the deliberate awakening of the indwelling serpent-like-Kundaīnī Śakti through some definite processes. Once she has been awakened, she becomes thereafter the real leader and guru and liberator. Indeed it is held by some thinkers that the main aim of Yoga is to link up this Kundaīnī with Śiva, and individual effort is the instrument of this union. On the contrary, it would appear that the most legitimate Yoga is the Yoga achieved by the irresistible Mother within who unites the individual soul and ht śiva in a perfect Unity. The process of awakening of this Kundaīnī alone involves individual effort, and beyond this it does not go.

The Śakta view that the macrocosmic Mother (Umā Haimavati, Kali, Durga, Śakti) is identical with the ādhyātmically realised Kundaīnī within the psychonic system of the individual, reveals in a large and profound understanding that the individual body is but a kṣetra, the field, wherein the play of delight (īlā) between Śiva and His Will personified as Śakti takes place, wherein the witnesses are the devas and devīs personalized as the super-organs of mystic experience and knowing and their powers and the individual soul. The micorcosmic representation of the God gradually begins to lose itself in the Absolute Universal and its continuity with all the infinite glory of that Absolute is thus established.

III

Now we turn to the Vaiṣṇava āgamas. There are tow schools of Vaiṣṇava āgama, the Vaikhānasa and the Pāñcarātra, and both of them claim a status equal to the Vedic literature. Vaikhānasa literature is brāhmana literature whereas the Pāñcarātra, is a tantra said to be taught by Nārāyaṇa Himself. The Vaiṣṇava Āgamas accept the Motherhood of God along with the Fatherhood of God and of course as elsewhere the question of the status of these two forms of the One Divine has engaged much attention. It can be stated however that the Motherhood of God has always held a subordinate position to the Fatherhood of God: love always has been subordinated to Law and Sovereign Being. Power was always subordinated to Truth, though the precise ratio or rationale of subordination has remained undetermined. Yet it was well recognized also that the Mother was equally the creator and sustainer and uplifter of the creation, and these processes more truly belonged to Viṣṇu and His power or Śakti or inspire Śrī, Lakṣmī, even when considered in the purāṇic manner.

Śrī or Lakṣmī is Śreyas, the True Good, as distinguished from Preyas, the worldly goods: though popular imagination had always made Śrī, the goddess of wealth and plenty, and inconstant and indiscriminating in her distributions of wealth. This later phase more truly belongs to the Earth or Bhū or BHūta Śakti, the ‘Sudarśaṇa portion of Lakṣmī.’”

The place of Śrī is finely indicated by the four magnificent verses of Śrī Yāmunācārya (A.D.1000) called the Catuśśloki. He holds that Śrī is equal in every respect to the Lord being the co-enjoyer of the seat, vehicle, attendants, and whose veil (yavanikā) is Māyā, the world-deluder (Jaganmohini) whose incite nature is incomprehensible even to the Lord Puruṣottama. She is singly capable of performing all activities svakīyam viśadhāriṇā sāmartyam eva hi svadhā. “Her special province is however Grace, dayā or karuṇa. for it is stated to be her grace (īsat tvat karunūā nirīkṣanasudhā sandhuṣṇānāt ṛte ....). In every form of the Puruṣottama, as Transcendent Lord, as Creating Deity, as incarnating Avatār, as Indwelling Self of all, she too in an appropriate manner is incarnate. The vyūhas of the mother are thus closely related with vyūhas of the Puruṣottama, so much so, the relationship between the Mother and Puruṣottama has been described as aviinābhāva, inseparability, and comparable to the relationship that subsists between the moon and his rays, candra candrikayoriva. The Mother Śrī is thus the fullest consciousness-power of the Divine Puruṣottama, and in Śrī Vaiṣṇava theology, She is approached as the Mother who leads us as the agent of our ascent to the Lord, which she fulfils through Her illimitable Grace and knowledge. In other words, She is the Teacher and the Way. Even the Vedic Agni is considered to be just leading us to the Mother alone.

The difference between the Śaiva and Vaiṣṇava views consists in the fact that the Śakta – Śaiva vies grants to Śakti all the power of creativity and being and making and sustaining by making Śiva just a Transcendent Sat, Witness. Thus truly in one sense they make "Her the All". The Śrī Vaiṣṇava view, whilst not denying such a possibility, regulates the idea of cosmic being and action by the original Grace and redemptive interference and Will. Further, whereas the former makes the Mother also veiler or the Ignorance that is the characteristic of the lower Prakṛit, Śrī Vaiṣṇava theology makes Śrī, the Parā-Prakṛit, the most illumined consort of the Self, the inward love, the Heart of the Divine in and through and above manifestation. Her's is the reign of purity, illumination, the devayāna, the true and permanent wealth, the love that elevates, transforms and divinizes our natures.

The truth is that whatever may be the actual possibility of postulating infinite number of devatās and even when we could achieve a plausible explanation of the several manifestations belonging to the several planes of being, such as the bhū, bhuvah, and svah, and their subdivisions which may account for seven planes above and seven planes below, we know that just as we arrive at a cosmic Puruṣottama, the One Deva who contains and manifests innumerable forms His eternal Being, called the several devas and devis, even so, we must finally arrive at one primordial Mother –power who manifests Herself in manifold ways. We have to note that Śaktism was metaphysically postulating that the One primal Śakti descended into the lower strands of the ignorant world of unconscious matter or rather made for the possibility of the infinite incorruptible Śiva, the One Saccidānanda Being appearing as if ignorant and unconscious, bond and miserable. Whatever may be the explanation, whether we hold that the transcendent Mother-power, had, on the one hand, preserved Her sovereign Cidānanda and remained the higher Mother, and on the other, projected a portion of Herself into the Ignorance for play and thus appears in the form of Nature, the Prakṛit of the Sāṃkhyas, the Māyā of the Māyāvādins, in our estimate it is necessary to hold that there are two primal splits, one descending movement seen as the Māyā, Prakṛti, Avidyā which whilst being innately pure consciousness is appearing as Ignorance, limitation, and bondage, pāś, whilst the other split remains the eternal source, the eternal continuity of the transcendental, the height and the true altitude of Being, which is the eternal immortal sense of the projected infinity and ignorance, which the ignorance cannot know, but which in the search for liberation the individual feels to be the true Mother.

The Vaiṣṇava view also postulates Bhūdevī, the R̥g Vedic Pṛthvī, mother earth, and considers that she too is an eternal nitya, but she is the presiding deity of the earth, not the earth itself. But the status of this Bhū-devī in the Veda has been shown to be rather varying and all that we can see is that Bhū-devī<sup>1</sup> is in fact the Supreme Power in her aspect of presiding deity of the creatures in evolution, and is the leader of souls in her own dark inconscient manner. If Bhū is the first or terrestrial Mother, and both are indeed inseparably united in the Divine. Śrī Vaiṣṇava thinkers however do not equate this twofold Mother, as Bhū<sup>2</sup> and Śrī, with Dīti and Adīti, for that do them is not the ultimate truth of the Bhū is not prepared to tolerate the asura any more than Śrī, but it may be stated that She is the visible giver of Preyas when Śrī has been attained. Any account of the Bhū-devī will have to be speculative in Vaiṣṇava Theology. We can however point out that Sītā<sup>3</sup> of Rāgmāyaṇa and Śrī Āndāl are considered to be children of Earth, amśas of Bhū-devī, partial manifestations of Bhū-devī. It is stated in the Vaikhāṇsa and Viṣṇu Purāṇa (I.9.144) that Bhū devī was herself an incarnation of Śrī, during the incarnation of Paraśurāma, the celibate.

Thus it is clear that in the fullest understanding of the Divine Nature of the Mother we have to conceive of the two foldness of the Divine as the Mother of the Transcendent World and as the Mother of the Created world of Līlā. And the Mother in the one is the apparent ignorance driving us in evolution towards the Mother Beyond, the Śreyas. No less in ignorance than in knowledge, the purpose of Mother is the experience of that supreme Illimitable Being of the Puruṣottama. To us the Līlā appears as the play of Avidyā so long as we know not the Mother beyond. For as the great āḷvār Śaṭhakopa stated (in the Tiruvāśarīyam) we play with the doll-image of the Mother when she herself is with us. When therefore we learn to know the Mother as even behind the veil of Her māyā, then we begin to drop off these playthings and see in Her the One in the triune. The third form of the Mother is called Nīlā<sup>1</sup>, (Medhā Sūkta in the Yajur Veda is stated to refer to Nīlā) Black Dark Mother, beyond all our knowing and the ineffable transcend being in whom is wrap the Divine Kṛṣṇa ever in cosmic ecstasy<sup>1</sup>. She is Grace who hides from God the Faults of devotees.

In the Yoga of Śrī-Vaiṣṇavism in general, there is no place for the dionysic worships of Kali or the pure power aspect. Śrī Vaiṣṇavism makes the Mother the agent of our transformation on Sātvik lines as Mahā-Lakṣmi or Śrī; who ever resides in the Supreme Puruṣa Puruṣottama. Nārāyaṇa or Viṣṇu, the imnipervader. God is the Means (upāya) and the Goal (upeya) and Mother is the agent, the puruṣakara. Purity is the essence of the yoga of surrender; prapatti or śaraṅāgati, and Mothers acceptance of the soul and the agency are possible only under conditions of purest sattva; harmony. The ascending soul should know that sattva has more power and efficacy and everlasting delight than the rajasic or vital power. The transformation of the Mother from the pure power-aspect into the Mother of Beauty and Light and Purity is the transformation that has entailed the growth of the concept of Ahimsa an benevolent love even to the enemies, and the realisation that God is indeed in all beings without any difference. Man's privilege and unique quality consists not merely in his intellectual abilities but more in his having the heart of sympathy and karuṇa or love. But the transcendent nature is such that she has not yet become the vita force in the ordinary life of mankind. Dr Rāmānuja knew that man cannot take heave by violence. The worship of gotten in the nature of the deity as such, will, in the end, defeat the end of realisation of God in all Kāli or than deity, though it may well be a truth that cannot be forgotten in the nature of the deity as such, will in the end, defeat the end of realisation of God in all and in each. But more than all, the one significant feature that has to be noted I shat the mother is the Self of all creatures even as the Puruṣottama is the Self of all creatures, and together they lead and transform the soul; and we the souls form their bodies. We are śeṣas. He along with her is the śeṣi. more and more our sadhan should incline towards the realisation that Mother is the soul of our bodies and that she with her infinite wisdom and love will be the agency of our transformation. Though at the beginning of the sādhanā She may appear (even as the Divine Puruṣottama) as above and even outside, gradually She will be felt within the soul. She then uplifts the soul and makes it realise that it has a supreme freedom of moving with Her to the domains of infinite Being and ipso facto to the domains of the Supreme Puruṣottama. Surrender means quite but determinate offering of all of one's activities to the Divine Mother and Lord who together will grant the highest liberation. It is then alone we shall be able to realise the unity of the triple or multiple manifestations of the Mother, Even as in the case of Vedic godheads, where the several gods are arranged in a hierarchy due to planar activities, and therefore appear to be subordinated to those of the higher planes, here the goddesses being but counterparts (śādharmā –cārinis) of the gods are hierarchically arranged as belonging to several planes. The Highest enfolds all gods and goddesses and thus becomes the Primary Cause of all, for into Him all these are withdrawn. The Paratattva-niṣkarṣa means only this Supreme Determination of who the Highest Person is whose manifold activities and manifestations all these are. The attainment of that Person who is Universal without being abstract, who is One without refuting the manifold and multiplicity which are but His own projections of His inherent richness of content is the one thing that will make for integral living. The vyūhas of the Infinite Being are indeed personalities of that One Being who is the integral Saccidānanda; and each of these personalities of the One is an integral expression of that Rich Oneness. The gods and goddesses on the contrary are, in later thinking, reduced to the level of functionaries, even like souls which have each a station and duty, dharma and loka. Originally due to the realisation that all the godheads or gods must be held together, their Oneness was expressed by the term vyūhas, the presiding Integral Deity of each plane. This entailed the rejection of most of the goddesses from being the vyūhas of the Supreme integral Mother, and thus they became just bodies of the Mother even like the souls<sup>1</sup>. That is why later we find that souls are described as belonging to several jātis, classes, like God, man, animal, plant and mineral according to the kind of body inhabited. And even the gods are said to be bound by karma, that is, they no longer play the role of

Jīvanmuktas bty only baddhās (booudn to cosmic duty) who have to get out of samsāra (creative līlā), Śrī thus becomes the Sjupreme Mother, an agent of release even for the Gods and goddesses, even as Nārāyaṇa-Viṣṇu becomes the Goal and means for the release of the gods and goddesses. The purnśa-level of thinking had arrived at this stage, for the mukta or the liberated soul passes beyond the goes and goddesses to the abode of the One Supreme Being with Śrī (the Diunity),

According to Śrī Vaiṣṇavism therefore there are three Divine forms of the one Mother namely Bhūdevī, Nīlādevi and Śrīdevi.

Sri Aurobindo's Vision of the Mother

Sri Aurobindo's concept or rather vision of the Mother is an attempt at an integral exposition and as such includes every phase of the Vedic, Brāhmaṇic, Upaniṣadic, tāntric and Vaiṣṇava conceptions. His Valuable exposition about the integral relationship of the several powers of the one Mother of Grace and Supramental Being, saccidānanda-mayī, reveals the reality of the several personalities of the Mother in several planes of consciousness, involved as well as evolved and transcend. The mother is the unveiled eternal consciousness force (it-śakti) of the Original Being (sat) and may indeed be described as the reality in dynamic existence. She truly is superior even to the highest manifestation of herself maheśavī, the Supramental Being of calm, benignity, inexhaustible compassion and sovereign majesty, who is beyond the reaches of mortal man's highest intuition. What even the highest human intellect or even awakened intuition knows are but three of her forms. The first in Mahālakṣmi, the Mother of Pose, Beauty, Harmony, Rhythm, Opulence and captivating Grace, the sattva Śrī, if we may so speak of the revelation of the Mother to vision and understanding. She can brook no impurity and stands no ill or evil and force. She can only be known and adored by worshippers of absolute Beauty. Nearer mother of Supramental strength, power, swiftness and world-quaking force, intolerant of vice, a very form of time's destructive power. The worshipers of arbitrary power attain her but hard is her rule and violent the catastrophe that normally overtakes the egoistic worshiper of hers. She may be represented as the rajas śakti. The third form amenable to the purified vision of man in Mahāsarasvatī, who is the Supramental consciousness endowed with profound capacity for intimate knowledge, flawless work, quite and exact perfection in all thing and is patience. She forges ahead amidst the vilest and the most exalted men, These are all all Supramental being and are called the four supernal, the Mother of Four personalities projected out of Her Infinite and Descending Grace working integrally on the four planes of awakened intelligence and dedicated being. Mahākāṭī is the Supramental omniscient will Mahālakṣmī is Omnipotent Knowledge, whereas Mahāsarasvatī works in and through the three lower planes of Ignorance namely the mental, the vital and the physical<sup>1</sup>.

“The four aspect of the Mother, four of her leading Powers and Personalities have stood in her guidance of this Universe, Wisdom, Strength, Harmony. Perfections are their several attributes. To the four we give the four great names: Maheśvarī, Mahākāṭī, Mahālakṣmī, Mahasarvasvatī” Says Sri Aurobindo<sup>1</sup>. Mother's powers are however not exhausted by these four personalities. There are infinities in Her that surpass all understanding. Mother is the principle of the large evolution of a man, for it is indeed She who is descending into the creatures and grants them the wisdom to see the truth and elect to follow it, the will to move, even alone to the great evolution and the power of frenzy, it is she who guides man by the delicate perception of the ideal of harmony, and beauty; and it is she again who makes him profoundly dissatisfied with mere truth, power or even beauty and leads to the realisation of Perfection which is Truth, Power, Beauty, and their fullest expression. The liberation which the Mother achieve for man is thus the liberation from Ignorance, liberation from restriction and limitation, liberation from disharmony and struggle and competition, and false rhythms and lastly liberation from the sense of incompleteness. This is the meaning of the ultimate transcendent destiny. Thus the Mother is the agent of our transformation, puruśākara to use the language of Śrī Vaiṣṇavism and without Her descending grace nothing whatsoever can occur, Sri Aurobindo's exquisite representation of the multiplanal nature of Mother, as Mahāsarasvatī, Mahākālī, Mahālakṣmī and Maheśvari, reveals the corresponding need for the aspiration of man to be truthful, faithful and loving and whole<sup>2</sup>. The two things absolutely needed in the Yoga of Divine Evolution are the aspiring integral offering of the soul and the descending integral Grace of the Mother, and integral offering and an integral acceptance and finally indwelling which leads to the divinization which may pass through the stages of gradual sublimation through the activities of the Mother's fourfold nature in the offered up transmuting work, and indeed She is the Philosopher's or rather the Mystic's or Purna –Yogin's Stone.

The importance of the Mother to our spiritual experience is to be gathered from the stress laid on the nature of Grace, Dayā or Karuṇa, much more than on the other aspects of the nature of Deity. This at least is the importance in the earlier schools of theology, especially in the Sri Vaiṣṇava and Tāntrika. But that is not the only reason for her greatness and the need in Sri Aurobindo's philosophy. The Mother works through the supermind, integrally making effective the triune qualities of the Absolute Sat, Cit and Ānanda and working out the integral unit of the Knowing Subject, known Object and knowledge<sup>1</sup>. It may be argued that when we can easily attain the Saccidānanda without this mediation of the Supermind we need not resort to this entity or power of the Saccidānanda. It is true also that some persons have been able to achieve this Absolute Saccidānanda Consciousness and they have once and for all time given up the manifestation. At least it appears<sup>1</sup> to be a Heaven from which we need not return at all, Identity having been achieved absolutely and finally. But that is not the goal nor Evolution or is it utterly desirable. The Saccidānanda has a secret mystery in the creative action wherein it seeks to manifest its innate and supreme secret of multiplicity in test of its own large identity without throwing all these into the whirl of opposition or even contrariety. Sri Aurobindo senses that the power by which we can again this unity of multiplicity without compromise or contradiction lies only in the Supermind, the pure vehicle of the Mother, Cit-Śakti in its integral unity. It is the mother who can take up the entire lower form of manifestation, matter, life and mind and even the overmind and mould them in the pattern of the significant unity. In that or in Her all things become significantly real, for all these are but real-ideas projected from Her substance by Being. That is the reason why we call that Mother. But even this

Mother can never be touched unless man abandons for ever the mind, the instrument of this present knowing, and passes into the Silence of the pure self, the cāitaya-puruṣa (the psychic Being). That is why Sri Aurobindo points out the necessity of a total surrender to the descending Supramental Power, four-fold in its downward movement, and capable of accepting the soul's surrenders and transforming or raising its consciousness and will and delight natures. Total surrender thus really is a

<sup>1</sup> I believe that rebirth will be enforced on every being, ray or fulguration so long as it does not grasp the Saccidānanda in its limits and in its foundational tri-unity. And though one may achieve by a sheer jump or leap the Absolute identity, its own otherness will enforce a step down into experience of its multiplicity in its unity.

Stepping stone to the entry into the silence of the pure Self, and prepares for the action and therefore recognition and awareness of the Mother in the descending creative movement of the Supermind, Thus the Mother is not merely an agent of our transformation, not merely again the mere mediating eminence which leads us to the summit of Saccidānanda as such, from the mental and the overmental (intuitive) stages; she is indeed a different kind of Consciousness in every way from the mental. That is the reason why we should guard against the explanations normally given that the so called supermind is but a more intensive consciousness or a more wide awake skill in intellect 'born out of thinking hard' There is no shading off of the several levels into one another there, for the supermind itself, though interpenetrative in its unified vision and awareness, is yet not merely our consciousness, mental and overmental; it is too universal to be private, too fundamentally and integrally united and inseparably so united to be just a composing and synthesizing activity. This is the meaning of avinābhāva, and it is through the Mother alone we cannot merely understand that truth of reality but also enter into the Joy of its manifestation which is unfortunately denied to us who are of the mental level, but is also denied to many who have lost themselves in the glamour of the Nirguṇa, which is but one aspect or side of the Absolute Divine. Mother grants not merely the awareness of the infinite determinations and processes and powers in their integral fusion and organic rhythm but also the awareness of the transcendence of the Absolute over all these in its illimitable puissance

Śrī Rāmnānuja's analysis of the three forms of the Mother reveals her action as consisting in supporting the physical leading to the Divine and granting the Divine to the soul. Sri Aurobindo's analysis shows her evolutionary action of super-metallisation of the organic.
